GREATEST DREAMS AND DESIRES

Let's be real—everyone has dreams. Whether it's buying your first apartment, building something of your own, moving abroad, making music, or simply waking up every day doing what you love, our dreams are what push us forward. Some people dream big and loud, others keep their goals lowkey—but either way, they're deeply personal and totally valid.

The thing is, chasing your dreams isn't always as smooth as it looks online. It's not all sunshine and success stories. The road to getting where you want to be can be confusing, messy, and full of plot twists. You might take a shot and totally miss. You might hit a wall, doubt yourself, or even want to give up. But guess what? That's normal. Behind every "overnight success," there's usually a backstory of late nights, self-doubt, and trying again.

What counts as a dream or desire is totally up to you. It could be traveling solo, becoming financially independent, getting a degree, launching a creative project, or even finding a healthy work-life balance. At the end of the day, your goals don't need to impress anyone—they just need to mean something to you.

It's also important to say that dreams can change—and that doesn't mean you're giving up. It means you're evolving. Maybe what mattered to you two years ago doesn't feel right anymore. That's called growth. We're all figuring it out as we go, and that's okay.

Another thing to keep in mind is that not all dreams are meant to be huge or life-changing. Sometimes, the most powerful desires are simple: to feel safe, to live without burnout, to have time to enjoy the small things. These kinds of goals are just as valid and often harder to admit because they don't always fit the typical definition of "success." But real success isn't about impressing the world—it's about living a life that feels good on the inside.

And don't forget: not all progress is visible. Just because you're not "there" yet doesn't mean you're not moving. Some days, showing up, trying again, or simply resting is part of the journey. Keep taking steps, even small ones. You never know when something's going to click, or when a new opportunity is around the corner.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS:

- 1 - What's one dream you have that really matters to you, even if it feels far away right now?
- 2 - Do you think following your passion is worth the risk, or is it better to play it safe?
- 3 - Has your idea of "success" changed as you've gotten older? If yes, how?

How you deal with pressure, fear of failure, or comparison
