REGRET: THE MISTAKES THAT SHAPE US

Everyone has regrets. Whether it's something you said, something you didn't say, a risk you didn't take, or a decision that backfired—regret is just part of being human. Some are small, like skipping a chance to talk to someone. Others stick with us for years, replaying in our heads like a scene on loop.

In today's world, where everyone is expected to move fast and always "be on the grind," we don't always give ourselves space to process our mistakes. But let's be honest—no one has a perfect record. We've all dropped the ball, messed up, or gone with the safe choice when deep down we knew we should've taken a leap.

Sometimes, our biggest regrets come from fear—fear of failure, judgment, or change. And later, when the moment's long gone, we say things like, "What if I had just gone for it?" or "Why didn't I speak up?" It's a tough feeling, but it also teaches us a lot. Regret can be heavy, but it also helps us grow—if we don't get stuck in it.

There's also the flip side: people say "no regrets" like it's a badge of honor. But truth is, most people have something they'd do differently. The goal isn't to avoid all mistakes—it's to learn how to bounce back, take ownership, and try again. We all have chapters we don't read out loud, but they still shape who we are.

At the end of the day, it's not about being perfect—it's about being real. Regret doesn't define you. What matters is what you do next. Whether it's making peace with the past or using it to guide your next move, regret can be fuel—not just a weight.

DISCUSSION QUESTIONS:

- 1 - What's a regret (big or small) that taught you something valuable?
- 2 - Do you believe in the idea of "no regrets"? Why or why not?
- 3 - How can people turn a regret into a positive lesson or motivation?
- 4 - Why do you think regrets are important for us?

Guide:

Describe one regret you've had (real or imagined), and what led to it.

Reflect on how that experience could help you or others in the future.
