

LISTENING

#04

1 - Listen to three short conversations where people ask for and receive directions. For each scenario, answer the questions to show you understand where the person is going and how they should get there.

Getting There: Listening for Directions

Scenario 1 –

1 - Where is this person trying to get to?

2 - Where is the elevator located?

3 - Where should he take the elevator to? (Specify the floor or location.)

4 - From what location will the person be able to see the elevators?

Scenario 2 –

1 - What is this person looking for?

2 - After going down the stairs, what should she do?

3 - Did the woman understand the directions, or did she need more explanation?

4 - How many flights of stairs should she take?

Scenario 3 –

5 - Who is this person looking for?

6 - Where does her friend work, and what do they sell there?

7 - What should she do after going down the stairs?

8 - What is this person looking for?

Lost in the City

Sophia had just arrived in London for the first time. After dropping her luggage at the hotel, she decided to explore the city on foot. The crisp autumn air carried the smell of roasted chestnuts from a nearby vendor, and the streets buzzed with energy.

Her plan was simple: visit the British Museum. However, after walking for fifteen minutes, she realized she had taken the wrong turn somewhere. The street names twisted in her mind, and every corner looked strangely similar.

Sophia approached a man in a long coat, holding a briefcase.

“Excuse me, could you tell me how to get to the British Museum?” she asked politely.

The man smiled and pointed to the left. “Of course. Walk two blocks straight ahead, then turn right at the large bookstore. From there, continue for about ten minutes. You’ll see the museum on your left—it’s a massive building, you can’t miss it.”

Grateful, she repeated the directions softly to herself, afraid she might forget: two blocks straight, right at the bookstore, ten minutes ahead, on the left.

As she followed the instructions, she noticed new details around her: the architecture, the rhythm of pedestrians, and the subtle differences in accents she heard on the street. The directions didn’t just guide her; they became a way of connecting to the city.

When she finally saw the grand columns of the museum rising in the distance, Sophia smiled. Getting lost had turned into an unexpected lesson—not just in navigation, but in communication and trust.

COMPREHENSION QUESTIONS

1 - Why did Sophia get lost on her way to the British Museum?

2 - How did the man describe the directions to reach the museum?

3 - Why did Sophia repeat the instructions to herself?

4 - What did Sophia notice about the city as she followed the directions?

5 - What broader lesson did Sophia learn from the experience of getting lost?
