The Job Interview

Maria had been searching for a new job for several months. One afternoon, she received an email from a technology company inviting her to an interview. She felt nervous but also very excited.

On the day of the interview, Maria arrived ten minutes early. She wore a simple but professional outfit and carried a copy of her résumé. At the reception desk, she smiled and said, "Good morning, I have an interview scheduled with Mr. Johnson."

A few minutes later, she was invited into the office. Mr. Johnson greeted her warmly and asked her to sit down. The interview started with simple questions about her experience and skills. Then he asked, "Why do you want to work for our company?"

Maria took a deep breath and answered, "Because I admire your projects, and I believe I can contribute with my knowledge and teamwork."

The interview lasted about thirty minutes. When it ended, Mr. Johnson said, "Thank you, Maria. We will contact you soon."

As she left the building, Maria felt proud of herself. Even if she didn't get the job, she knew she had done her best.
