JOINING THE GYM

Lucas had been living in São Paulo for almost a year, and between the heavy traffic, long work hours, and endless invitations to try new restaurants, his fitness routine had completely disappeared. One Saturday morning, after struggling to button his favorite jeans, he finally decided it was time to join a gym.

He walked into a modern fitness center near Paulista Avenue. The place was buzzing with energy—people on treadmills, trainers giving instructions, and music pumping through the speakers. A receptionist greeted him with a friendly smile.

“Good morning! First time here?” she asked.

“Yes,” Lucas replied. “I’m interested in joining. Could you explain the plans?”

She handed him a brochure. The options included a basic plan for early mornings, a standard plan with flexible hours, and a premium plan with access to group classes, personal trainers, and even a sauna.

As they toured the facilities, Lucas noticed a weight room, a yoga studio, and an indoor cycling area. He was impressed. Still, he asked, “Do I need to sign a long-term contract?”

“Not necessarily,” the receptionist explained. “You can pay monthly or choose an annual plan with a discount. It depends on your goals.”

After thinking for a moment, Lucas chose the standard plan. It felt like the right balance of cost and flexibility. Walking out with his new membership card, he felt motivated. For the first time in months, he was ready to take control of his health again.
