SCRIPT: WELCOME DINNER

Orla: Where do you come from?

Azra: I'm from Turkey, but I've lived in Dublin for years.

Orla: Ah, you're basically a native now. What do you think about this restaurant?

Azra: It's a nice place.

Shaun: Ah, the traveler is here.

Jasmine: Sorry I'm late. Traffic was a nightmare.

Shaun: Friday night traffic. Always terrible! It can be like a car park out there sometimes. It can take me hours to get home.

Jasmine: Really? So you live outside the city?

Shaun: Not as bad as Los Angeles though. I was at a conference there last year. The traffic was so bad I arrived late and missed my presentation. The boss was not happy. But that's nothing compared to my flight from Dublin to Bangkok a few years back. Did I ever tell you that story? They lost all my luggage. I tell you, I'm never flying with that airline again.

Thiago: Hi, I'm Thiago.

Jasmine: Jasmine. Nice to meet you.

Thiago: You too. How long was your trip?

Jasmine: About an hour.

Thiago: Shaun says you're American. Where are you from?

Jasmine: That's right. I'm from Boston. I went to university there. Do you know it?

Thiago: No, I've never been, but I'd like to.

Jasmine: Thiago — that's a Brazilian name, isn't it?

Thiago: It is. My father's from Brazil, but I'm Italian. So, do you know Orla?

Jasmine: Yeah, I met her at the interview. She's really nice. Hey, what do you know about working at TGC?

Thiago: Not much.

Alex: So, I heard you come from Turkey. Whereabouts?

Azra: Well, I was born in Istanbul, but my parents moved to London when I was five. We go back quite often to see family. Do you know Turkey?

Alex: A little. I went there on holiday about three years ago. Which do you prefer — London or Istanbul?

Azra: Hmmm. That's difficult. I love them both.

Alex: No more difficult questions, I promise. We're supposed to be relaxing.

Azra: No problem.
