

LISTENING

#25

1 – Listen to a team meeting where employees discuss a new coaching initiative. Pay attention to what concerns the team members express, how Shaun addresses them, and what suggestions are made during the conversation.

A SMOOTH MEETING

1 - What does the man mean when saying they already have the “go-ahead” from Lyanna?

- a) A proposal
- b) The permission
- c) A project idea

2 - What is the main reason the man asks for the team’s opinion?

- a) To check their availability
- b) To make final decisions together
- c) To assign new roles

3 - What concern does Thiago raise?

4 - How does the manager respond to that concern?

5 - What concern does the woman mention about the project?

- a) They’re not trained coaches
- b) They don’t know the directors
- c) They don’t have enough money

6 - What solution does the man offer for the woman’s concern?

7 - What new name does Mike suggest for the project?

8 - What idea does one person suggest involving the directors?

9 - What does the team need to decide at the end of the meeting?

- a) Which directors to work with
- b) When the training will happen
- c) What tools to use

Full Name _____

READING COMPREHENSION

The Coaching Culture at Work

When Melissa's company first introduced a peer coaching program, most employees were unsure about how it would work. The idea was simple: people from different departments could support each other by sharing their skills and experiences. For example, an IT specialist could help someone in marketing with new software, while a marketing expert could teach presentation skills in return.

At first, many workers were nervous about the word "coaching." It sounded formal and intimidating. But after the first few sessions, they realized it was just about learning from one another. The company encouraged employees to set personal goals for improvement and to schedule short, informal sessions.

Soon, the results became clear. Communication between teams improved, and employees started to feel more confident in their roles. The HR department noticed a big change in the office atmosphere—people were more open, patient, and willing to help. Managers also joined the program, which helped close the gap between leadership and staff.

Melissa herself learned how to manage her time better and became more organized. She even discovered that coaching someone else helped her reflect on her own strengths and weaknesses. After a few months, the company realized that the biggest benefit wasn't just skill improvement—it was a stronger sense of teamwork and trust.

Comprehension Questions

1. What was the main goal of Melissa's company's coaching program?

2. Why were employees nervous at first?

3. What positive change did HR notice in the office?

4. Do you think coaching between coworkers can improve communication? Why or why not?

5. Have you ever helped a colleague learn something new? How did it go?
