

LISTENING

#28

1 – Listen to a manager giving feedback to an employee during a performance review. Pay attention to what the manager praises, what areas for improvement are mentioned, and what advice is given for the employee's development.

STRENGTHS & WEAKNESSES

1 - How long has the employee been working at the company?

---

2 - What does the manager say about the employee's overall progress?

- a) They are disappointed
- b) They are pleased
- c) They are unsure

3 - What positive qualities does the manager mention?

---

4 - What situation does the manager mention to highlight his interpersonal skills?

- a) Helping a client
- b) Supporting Jasmine after the Miami conference issue
- c) Solving a technical problem

5 - What does the manager say about his sense of humor?

---

6 - What kind of feedback does the manager say she will give?

- a) Negative feedback only
- b) Corrective feedback
- c) Financial feedback

7 - What area of his work does the manager say needs improvement?

---

8 - Why is the company concerned about missed deadlines?

- a) It causes problems for clients
- b) It reduces profits
- c) It affects employee morale

9 – What does the manager say about the expenses claims?

- a) They should be submitted after the deadline
- b) Thiago develop an app for it
- c) They should be submitted on time and there's a new app to help with that

Full Name _____

READING COMPREHENSION

Learning from Feedback

For many people, receiving feedback at work can be stressful. Some see it as criticism, while others see it as a chance to improve. In fact, learning how to receive feedback positively is one of the most useful skills in any career.

When Ana joined her company, she quickly learned that performance reviews were taken seriously. Every six months, employees met with their managers to discuss what they had done well and what could be better. At first, Ana felt nervous. She didn't like hearing that she made mistakes, even small ones. But over time, she realized that the meetings weren't meant to make her feel bad — they were opportunities to grow.

Her manager, Clara, always started with something positive. "You're doing a great job organizing the team schedule," she'd say. Then she would move to areas for improvement. Once, Clara told Ana that her reports were often late. Instead of getting upset, Ana listened and decided to set daily reminders to finish her tasks earlier. The next month, she submitted everything on time.

After a year, Ana noticed a big difference. She had become more confident, responsible, and respected by her colleagues. She understood that feedback wasn't an attack; it was a tool. Now, she even asks for feedback herself — after big meetings or projects. It helps her see what others notice about her work.

In the end, Ana realized that good feedback is like a mirror. It shows us things we can't always see, helping us become better at what we do.

Comprehension Questions

1. Why did Ana feel nervous during her first performance reviews?

_____

2. How does Clara usually start the feedback?

_____

3. What change did Ana make to improve her work?

_____

4. Do you like receiving feedback from other people? Why or why not?

_____

_____

5. How do you usually react when someone tells you to improve something?

_____

_____