READING COMPREHENSION

A New Start

Daniel had worked in a small electronics store for almost three years. The job was fine, but he did not feel excited about it anymore. Every day, he answered the same questions, organized the same products, and waited for the day to end. He wanted something different, but he was not sure where to begin.

One evening, Daniel talked to his cousin Marina, who worked for a software company. She told him that many companies needed people in customer support. Daniel was interested because he liked solving problems and explaining things clearly. He was not an expert in technology, but he was patient, friendly, and good with people.

The next week, Daniel started looking for online courses. He found a basic course about computer networks and another one about customer service. The courses were not expensive, so he decided to study at night after work. At first, it was difficult. He was tired when he got home, and sometimes he wanted to give up. However, after a few weeks, he started to understand the topics better.

Marina also helped him improve his résumé. She told him to describe his experience in a better way. Instead of just writing “worked in a store,” Daniel wrote that he helped customers, solved simple technical problems, and explained products clearly.

After two months, Daniel applied for a support assistant position at a local technology company. During the interview, he was nervous, but he spoke honestly about his experience and his courses. A few days later, the company called him. He got the job.
