

LISTENING
#32*Teacher's Guide*SCRIPT: JOB SEEKING

Kelly: So, have you found a job yet?

Josh: No, but, I have a few leads, so things are looking up.

Kelly: But isn't that what you always say?

Josh: Well . . . but this time is different.

Kelly: What are you looking for this time, then?

Josh: Actually, I want to work for a web hosting company.

Kelly: What would you do there?

Josh: Well, in a nutshell, you know, web hosting companies provide space for people to store and run their websites. Does it sound like I know what I'm talking about?

Kelly: Oh, yeah, sort of.

Josh: Well, And then, sort of? Well, they allow people to run their websites without having to buy or maintain their own servers, and I'd like to work in technical support, you know, helping customers resolve computer-related problems with their sites. And you know I'm a good communicator.

Kelly: So, how's the pay for that kind of job?

Josh: Well, most people I know start out with a very reasonable salary; you can earn pay increases depending on your performance.

Kelly: So, what about benefits?

Josh: Oh, the benefits are pretty good. They provide health insurance, two weeks paid vacation a year, and opportunities for advancement. And in the end, I'd like to work in a management position. You know, sitting back, enjoying the view out of the twentieth-story window of the office building. Something like that.

Kelly: Well, is there any long-term job security in a job like that?

Josh: Uhh. Hard to tell. I mean, the internet is booming, and these kinds of companies are sprouting up everywhere, which is a good thing, but just like the dot-com era, you never know how long things will last.

Kelly: Well, have you ever thought about going back to school to improve your job skills?

Josh: Wait, wait. What are you suggesting?

Kelly: Well, you know, more training might help you land a better job.

Josh: Wh . . . wh . . . Are you trying to say something about my current job? I mean, is there something going on here? I mean, what are you saying?

Kelly: Well, you know, you did drop out of college.

Josh: I know, I know, but I don't know. I'm just seeing my current job at McDonalds as a step up.

[McDonalds!] Yeah, but, you know, I don't have the resources to go back to school at the moment; however, the job I am looking at will pay for some classes after I have been with the company for six months.

Kelly: Well, it looks like you have things planned out this time.

Josh: If I last that long.

Audio Comprehension Questions:

1. No, but he has a few leads
2. a) A web hosting company
3. b) Space for people to store and run websites
4. Technical support
5. He would help customers resolve computer-related issues with their sites
6. a) People start with a reasonable salary
7. Health insurance
8. b) It is hard to tell
9. a) It might help him get a better job

Reading Comprehension Questions

1. He worked in a small electronics store.
2. Because he liked solving problems and explaining things clearly.
3. She helped him describe his experience in a better way.

Idioms/Useful Expressions

“Things are looking up” = the situation is getting better
 Josh says: “I have a few leads, so things are looking up.”

“In a nutshell” = in a short and simple way

Josh says: “Well, in a nutshell, you know, web hosting companies provide space for people to store and run their websites.”

“Hard to tell” = difficult to know or predict
 Josh says: “Uhh. Hard to tell.”

“Planned out” = organized or prepared in advance

Kelly says: “Well, it looks like you have things planned out this time.”